

Governor General's History Awards honour historians from across Canada

DARREN BOISVERT

On December 9th and 10th, historians, teachers and public officials gathered in Ottawa for the 2012 Governor General's History Awards celebrations. The awards are Canada's top honors in the field of history and heritage.

Rat Creek Press Managing Editor and (former) Ave We Had History Producer Darren Boisvert was in attendance to receive the Community Programming "Honourable Mention" award on behalf of the project team.

"It was an incredible honor to accept this award on behalf of the many people who participated and created this historical project," says Boisvert. "But best of all, I had a chance to present our community, our seniors, and our revitalization work to the nation."

The two-day event started off at the Canadian War Museum with the 5th Annual Enbridge Canada's History Forum, where attendees discussed ways to commemorate the upcoming 100-year anniversary of The Great War. The discussion ranged widely from how to engage people in Canada's history to future ideas for commemorating our nation's military past.

Blake Seward, a teacher from Smiths Falls, Ontario, who won the 2006 Governor General's for Excellence in Teaching, was a guest panelist who shared his ongoing experiences as the founder of the Lest We Forget project. Started in 2001, he asked his students to research the lives of the names etched onto the World War One cenotaph. The information gathered has been published online (including interviews with family members) and his students have made subsequent visits to France to find the graves of the soldiers they have come to appreciate.

"It's my firm belief that Canadian students don't like Canadian history because they are told what to think instead of deciding what is important to them," said Seward. "We should encourage students to ask the historical questions instead of being told 'what happened'."

The day's discussion ended on an appropriate note, with Jonathan Vance, professor at Western University and author of Death So Noble: Memory, Meaning and the First World War, sharing his thoughts on war commemoration and historical legacy.

He noted that there are over 7,000 Great War memorials across Canada, including cenotaphs, tributes, books, films, flags, and scrolls. It took decades for them all to appear in towns and cities across Canada, and surprisingly, had little in common with our current passion for telling a national war story.

"Commemoration is a test for the living," said Vance. "The whole point of commemorating the First World War was local -- it expressed local grief and loss, not as a tribute to national loss."

Recipients and organizers gathered on December 10th at Rideau Hall, the official residence of Canada's head of state. The Governor General of Canada, His Excellency the Right Honourable David Johnston presided over the event, and was quite visibly enjoying the day's events. Not a man wedded to the extreme protocols of state, he took time to interrupt his formal entrance to greet an old friend on the way down the aisle.

In his opening speech, the Governor General explained his support for the History Awards. "As an educator for much of my career, I would ask my students to consider the historical perspective behind any event. And as Governor General, I often draw insight from Canada's history in my speeches and remarks across the country and abroad.

"Canada did not happen by accident, and that is why I am so delighted to celebrate your efforts to study and share our history. Each of you is a storyteller, who knows that stories—true stories, well told—can sharpen our sense of history."

After the ceremony, the guests were invited to a lunch reception, and the Governor General graciously allowed the guests to wander Rideau Hall to view the incredible collection of Canadian paintings, sculptures and installation pieces. Most guests ended up in the three greenhouses attached to the residence, where they spent time looking for the large number of plastic dinosaurs hidden in the foliage. According to the greenhouse gardener, the grandchildren of the past three Governor Generals have created and added to this paleontological collection.

The weekend ended with a gala dinner inside Canada's War Museum, hosted by National Post columnist Andrew Coyne, where recipients and guests were treated to a fine meal and a musical presentation of 400 years of Canadian music.

THE AVE WE HAD HISTORY PROJECT

The Ave We Had History Project began as a Rat Creek Press and community effort to gather and preserve the stories of the people who grew up along 118th Avenue in Edmonton, Alberta. It brought together actors, historians, journalists, a photographer and community organizers who went out to document and interpret the collective history of Alberta Avenue. These stories, combined with archival research, have been the basis for an interpretive performance, publications in the Rat Creek Press newspaper and the creation of an online digital archive. The Ave We Had project is continuing with a community historical calendar (on sale now), and is currently assembling an interactive historical walking tour. All community members are encouraged to contact the Rat Creek Press to participate in (or pitch their own) historical projects.

We Freeze Deeply here in Ye Ol' Wild West

MARI SASANO

As the Deep Freeze Festival approaches its 6th year, Artistic Director Christy Morin shakes off a layer of snow as she enters the Carrot cafe. A sure sign of the festival's success, the festival has grown the need for a festival producer: introducing Cadence Konopaki, Morin's new deputy in this year's Wild West-themed event.

"I work closely with Christy for everything," she says, laughing. A veteran of some of Edmonton's summer festivals (she has worked with the Fringe, Improvaganza, and the Free Will Shakespeare Festival), Konopaki is excited about taking on her first winter event.

"I'm going to be annoyed in one of two ways: it's either going to be +10 and our snow sculptures are going to be melting, or it's going to be -40 and snowing and I won't be able to get cars through," she says. Indeed, both extremes played out in the past two years, but didn't stop the local residents or Edmontonians from attending. Konopaki herself is a 'south-sider' who is thrilled to be a part of our area's arts scene.

"I know quite a lot about Arts On The Ave because I used to work in this area, and I'm a big advocate for arts in the community; it's a great tool for revitalization and engagement."

With the demise of the City of Edmonton sponsored Winter Light Festival, Deep Freeze has become one of Edmonton's marquee winter festivals, along with Silver Skate and Ice on Whyte.

"We never really thought about it when we started that we'd be one of the real champions of winter," says Morin. "But now people are looking to us to see what we're doing and what works with our programming and why. We're really enjoying the phone calls from people saying, "How do we get this going? How did you come up with this idea?"

The existing programming has certainly expanded: there are going to be more street hockey rinks to accommodate demand, and the ice carving competitors will be working with larger blocks of ice for their gallery beside the Alberta Avenue Community League. In addition to the ice sculptures, the event will also be hosting snow carvers from Holland.

Also returning are the free skate rentals and curling, and the second annual Deep Freezer races, with a special fireworks tribute Saturday night to one of the race's founders and well-loved festival scene supporter, Don Snider.

As usual, the first day of the festival is dedicated to French culture in Canada, which includes the traditional cabane a sucre, log-sawing, and special guests from Montreal Bande Artistique performing on the festival's indoor main stage at the Avenue Theatre.

Saturday night's dance party will have an Acadian flavour with the sounds of the multilingual band, Le Fuzz and the foods of Newfoundland. Sunday's events will be Ukrainian-themed with lots of Ukrainian music, dance, and food.

New additions to the 2013 line-up include a screening of the short film Silk Cyclone, a stunningly beautiful dance piece that features Margie Gillis, one of Canada's premiere dance artists, on the east wall of the Nina Haggerty Centre. Also new is the Thaw Hut competition is a partnership with MADE in Edmonton, and it will be an architectural and engineering marvel set up on the site of the now-demolished Old Cycle Building. Successful entries will create warm-up areas that will be judged and awarded on Sunday.

As Edmonton's winter festivals mature, it's ideas like the Thaw Hut that ensure that a vibrant winter culture is viable.

"It's about getting out, but understanding that we do need to warm up to keep ourselves going so we can go out again," says Morin, adding that the festival has a good mix of indoor and outdoor events.

GOLDRING LOSES PRE-TRIAL MOTION

Edmonton East MP Peter Goldring lost his pre-trial bid to have the police release all radio transcripts for the night he was arrested for refusing a breathalyzer test. The judge ruled that while the discussions may have been relevant to Goldring's case, there was no evidence to suggest there was any relevant information.

Goldring's lawyer, Dino Bottos, has suggested that the defense will file a Charter of Rights challenge and argue that the Edmonton Police service unfairly targeted the member of parliament who is well known for arguing Checkstops are an infringement on the public's freedoms. The trial begins at the downtown law courts on January 17, 2013.

NEW COMMUNITY OFFICER FOR NEIGHBOURHOOD

Sgt. Chris Barbar was recently named as the new community Sergeant for Downtown District One. He will be replacing Sgt. Chris Hayduk as our community police representative, who has moved on to the Behavioural Assessment Unit where he monitors high risk offenders who have been released into the community.

Sgt. Barbar was recently a pilot for the police helicopter Air One, and will now be on the ground and available to answer the public's questions regarding police service in our community. Sgt. Barbar will be introducing himself to the neighborhood on both January 8th and 15th from 10am to 11:30am at the Carrot Cafe (9351-118th Avenue).

EASTWOOD COMMUNITY POLICE STATION STAYING PUT

Rumours that the Eastwood Community police station will be moved or closed in the coming months are unfounded, according to Lisa Sobchshyn, Communications Advisor with the Edmonton Police Service.

She said that Rod Knecht, who replaced Mike Boyd as the EPS chief of police in April 2012, is currently reviewing the plans and services for the department, but stressed this is normal practice for any incoming police chief.

There has been no discussion around moving or closing the Eastwood Station.

BATTLING THE BOTTLE ONE MORE TIME

Despite losing its bid to gain a liquor license last year, Arden Food Mart at 114 Ave and 95 Street has reapplied for a liquor store license. Under the liquor bylaw, all applicants are allowed to re-apply after 6 months.

The original application was denied as Arden Food Mart is within the 100 metre exclusion zone of a park. Concerned citizens will once again be given a chance to argue for or against the new application in the new year. The hearing date is still undetermined.

The contorted fools of city council

DARREN BOISVERT

It's hard not to be impressed by the negotiating skills of Darryl Katz. He understands that the primary goal of preliminary negotiations is to determine how low your opponent will stoop to make the deal happen. On December 12th, Edmonton City Councillors voted to re-open negotiations on the downtown arena, showing both Katz and the residents of Edmonton that they are masters of the limbo.

How much did City Council lower the bar on themselves?

In October when negotiations were suspended, city council demanded to have access to the Oilers books as a precondition to resuming talks. That didn't happen. Instead, they accepted Katz Group executive vice-president John Karvellas's proposal for an Arena Reserve Fund as a reasonable starting place for negotiations.

In a nutshell, the Arena Reserve Fund would be the tax surpluses paid by new arena district businesses to the city, and then handed over to a private citizen living in British Columbia. It's not just a horrible economic idea for the city; it borders on unconstitutionality.

Let's break it down.

This idea would effectively give every Katz business in the area a hard tax cap that would never rise over the course of the agreement. Any tax increase would be diverted to the Arena Reserve Fund, and then given back to Katz as revenue. If any other business or resident went before City Council to demand a 35 year tax freeze, they would have been laughed out of chambers. But not the Oilers.

It gets worse.

The main purpose of any municipal government is to collect and redistribute tax revenue. City Council is obligated to represent city residents interests and spend their money responsibly. Signing an agreement with a private corporation to share tax revenue would give the Katz Group an unelected seat at the tax table. But most importantly, since Katz is not a member of council, all discussions regarding raising the tax rate and redistributing those monies will most likely be conducted in private as part of a bilateral business agreement.

Any business in the area would -- in effect -- be agreeing to pay taxes not just to City Council for the public good (road repair, snow clearing, etc.), but to Darryl Katz. This idea doesn't just open the door to influence peddling; it hands the keys to the vault to an unelected citizen.

Much has been written about

Darryl Katz's "tin ear" when it comes to public relations, but this analysis ignores the fact that he is negotiating away the political capital of City Council -- not his own. Katz has already determined that City Councillors are desperate to make a deal before the next election. By agreeing to discuss sharing tax revenues, the majority of city council have shown they are willing to corrupt their basic political raison d'être to get a deal signed.

Katz has broken the back of City Council; they are no longer negotiating on behalf of city residents, but are dancing like contorted fools to the Edmonton Oilers theme song.

THE LEMONADE STAND THE ARCHITECTURE OF BUSINESS SUCCESS

Here is the fourth in the series on building a successful business. Our neighbourhood is filled with freelancers, entrepreneurs, independent artists, and cottage industries run from homes.

We hope that by presenting the challenges and hurdles faced by many independent business owners, along with sensible advice for success, will encourage others to consider following their dream of independence. This series is dedicated to helping these entrepreneurs succeed.

A simple story sells your business idea

HENRI YAUCK

In the last article we found that you needed to ask yourself two important questions about your new potential business venture, and make a list of the answers for each of the questions. The reason; these answers will become the backbone of your marketing, and the story that will reach your potential customers, turning them into customers and supporters (word-of-mouth marketers for you).

Consider this. A best selling author checked the reviews on Amazon and was amazed to find that about half of the readers gave the book a five star rating, along with a glowing review, while the other half gave the same book a one star rating, and literally vilified the author, the writing, the author's lifestyle, and even the people that liked the book.

Why the diametrically opposite points of view?

The book didn't really generate the various points of view. People took the opportunity to express the biases they had, even before they cracked the book open. The point is people don't want to change their personal world view. They like it, they embrace it and want it to be reinforced... validated.

A personal world view (or micro-world view) is the lens used to look at every decision an individual makes. However, it would be naive to think that millions of people have millions of different micro-world views. These views are 'groupy', that is, there are common memes that group strangers together.

The secret to many of the most successful marketing ventures is the desire to do what people we admire are doing is the glue that holds societies together.

As a marketer, if you are observant, you will understand that people like being in sync with their peers, you will find out those that believe your story will work hard to share it with their peers. No story or micro-world view equals no demand for your product, service or business. You need a story that is easy to spread, and if those that accept the story believe it is worth spreading, you will generate demand, sales and a growing customer base.

However, there is only a small subset of the population that spread the word of mouth messages. Call them buzz-agents, early adopters, sneezers or thought leaders; these are the people you must attract at first. This means you must have a good story that makes a noise like cheese to catch a lot of mice.

The Maple Leaf Gardens on 118th Avenue

JONATHAN WELLER

In the 1930s, the City of Edmonton decided to establish an outdoor rink on 118th Avenue between 96th and 97th Streets. Little remains as testament to this structure, like many rinks that were put up every year on empty lots in the neighbourhood, this one faded away with the summer and has been lost to all but memory.

The simple facilities of the rink were all that anyone in Edmonton at the time could ask for; it was above all an opportunity to play. What marks this rink as significant though is that it became home to the Maple Leaf Athletic Club.

Henry White, a paymaster for the CNR who lived next to Parkdale School, established the Maple Leaf Athletic Club in 1931. White was a prominent member of the community who was known for his active role in the Boy Scout movement and in organizing youth athletics. He encouraged the development of the Edmonton-based Maple Leaf Club as a source of potential enrichment for young men in Northeast Edmonton.

In 1948, they moved to a new building between 84th and 85th along 118th Avenue. The new building grew out of an old army hut that had been left unused following the war, but sported "fine hardwood floors and additional improvements" from their previous shelter.

They went on to win numerous leagues including a sweep of provincial championships for five consecutive years between 1948 and 1953 at the bantam, midget and juvenile levels.

The teams graduated numerous professional athletes, the 1950-51 Midget 'AA' team for example had six of twelve players who would go on to impressive professional careers in the NHL including Hall-of-Famer Norm Ullman, one of the greatest centers to ever play.

However, as with other cities in the country, the post-war years were booming and Edmonton was growing particularly quickly following oil strikes in the Leduc area. The growing number of children in the city pushed the community leagues to begin putting together teams. These teams, unlike the athletic clubs, which played more competitive hockey and drew talent from all over, were made up of local neighbourhood youth.

This gave rise to competition for City-owned rinks. Complaints and conflicts arose as the rivalry between the leagues grew and in 1962 the City Recreation Department asked representatives from the hockey community to come together to resolve these issues. Following a year of heated debate the Edmonton Metropolitan Hockey Association was formed in 1963 and governed the sport in the city for a number of years.

Today, our Maple Leaf Gardens is covered over with houses, but kids still steal out on Sunday mornings to practice and dream of the big future in rinks across our neighbourhood.

The Edmonton 'Boomer'

James Albert MacPherson was born in 1927 and grew up at 11831 97th Street. To the hockey world he was Bud, and to his fans, Boomer. At 6-foot-4 and weighing over 200 pounds, Boomer played the game in the way his name and his stature would imply. But before he became a defensive force, he was a kid slipping out the back door of his house to the north end of the Maple Leaf Gardens.

As Bud recalled in Alberta on Ice by Gary Zeman, "Early on Sunday mornings [my Brother Bill and I] would get on the rink and skate, pass the puck, and shoot. It became an obsession with me to be able to skate as fast as my father."

He began playing for the Maple Leaf Athletic Club in 1940 and continued on to 1944, contributing to their city and provincial championships. In 1948, at 21 years old, he helped the Edmonton Flyers win the Allan Cup, a feat that earned him a three-game trial with the Montreal Canadiens. After turning professional, Boomer stayed on with the Habs through to 1957.

During this time, he maintained his role as a pillar of the blue line. He modestly argued in an interview in January 1982 that "I never was a great star, I was always trade bait." But it was a time when the game was defensive, his partner and roommate throughout his career was the legendary Doug Harvey who continues to be considered one of the best defencemen of all time and playing under well known coach Dick Irvin, who was often criticized for his 'goon' tactics.

He had moved up from his early years at Edmonton's Maple Leaf Gardens, by the time he was playing at Toronto's Gardens, his home rink had likely been built over, but he still called Edmonton home.

MCCAULEY HOCKEY RINK

Last November it was my honour and privilege to present a Queen's Diamond Jubilee medal to Edmonton East resident Dan Glugosh, in recognition of his contributions to the community in promoting and managing the McCauley skating rink.

In 1999 there were plans to appropriate the full-size McCauley Community Hockey Rink (which is paved, allowing summer roller skating ball hockey), replacing it with rental housing by a social group intending to use "profits" from the "non-profit" housing to pay for social centre office space. Also proposed was to keep a rink so small as to be unacceptable for hockey, meant only to make the community believe that it would still have ice skating.

I was appalled at this callous social-centric takeover attempt. I felt it was important to save the hockey rink, the only such facility in the area. When I informed the community by mail out, people were aghast at losing the rink and spoke up. The social welfare project was cancelled and the rink was saved. Unfortunately the very sound community hall with washrooms was removed and now needs to be replaced. Fourteen years later the rink is still a community magnet in all seasons.

One of the highlights of the rink year is the now annual McCauley Cup where beat officers from Edmonton Police Service's Downtown Division take on McCauley community youth in a game of shinny. This gives area youth positive interaction with the police and allows stereotypes to be broken, for the benefit of the community.

I think facilities such as the McCauley rink are a treasure to all communities. We should be vigilant and rightfully suspicious of those that wish to appropriate them.

I think it's time for a skate. So drop by, thank Dan or maybe volunteer to help.
