NAIT's new building draws students

The college's presence has a positive impact on nearby businesses and housing

NAIT's new CAT building on 118 Avenue and 106 Street is the size of Kingsway Mall and provides room for 1,700 new students. | Kate Wilson

KATE WILSON

It's Canada's largest apprenticeship trainer. It's in our neighbourhood, and it just got bigger.

In September, NAIT opened its newest facility on the corner of 118 Ave and 106 Street. The five-storey Centre for Applied Technologies is NAIT's largest building—roughly the same size as Kingsway Mall. It increases enrollment capacity by 1,700 students in four programs.

While the addition revs up polytechnic training in Western Canada, it also adds to NAIT's benefits on the ground. The community continues to get an injection of diversity, with 2,000 international students from more than 80 countries. Businesses in the vicinity benefit as well.

Adam Hajar, co-manager at Donair Way in the Park Plaza Shopping Centre, said they've always had a strong customer base of NAIT students and staff.

"From ten in the morning til four in the afternoon, we get students and even lots of teachers," Hajar said.

Once a NAIT student himself, Hajar knows the importance of access to a fast meal.

"They want something quick, food that is good, filling," Hajar said. "We get line ups of just students. They want a donair and a drink and then out the door."

And another new facility is coming—NAIT's Productivity and Innovation Centre, opening in 2018.

According to a staff member at The Duck Taphouse and Grill across from NAIT, their business relies on NAIT's patronage almost exclusively, which means their numbers drop during the summer.

"If NAIT weren't here, we wouldn't be here," he said.

It's not as clear what NAIT's impact is on business outside its immediate vicinity. Retail managers said the impact doesn't go much beyond the traffic circle at 101 Street. Canadian Dollar Store, about 10 blocks away, gets no discernable student presence, while Fix My Phone, a cell service outlet on 101 Street, gets quite a few. Dave Dhaliwal, manager at Pizza 73, said he serves up both pizza and employment for students.

"We're connected in two ways. Students come as customers, and they drop in to ask about part-time jobs," said Dhaliwal.

Managers at two pharmacy franchises said NAIT made no difference to their business, but one commented that the campus does bring benefits when it comes to things like infrastructure and the higher profile from a leading polytechnic.

NAIT may have a greater stimulus in the housing sector. While older apartments in Westwood aren't seeing an influx of students, newer ones are. Helena Burgess, on-site manager for an older apartment on 103 Street, said they don't get NAIT students.

"A lot of students live in basement suites or in the newer apartments. They want the new places," said Burgess.

A manager with Mainstreet Properties, which runs several upgraded or new multiplexes in the area, agreed, explaining many NAIT students seek short-term rentals every fall.

Burgess said NAIT is a definite boost to the community. Before the parkade and the more recent additions to campus like the HP Centre, Spartan Centre and Petro-Canada Centre, the neighbourhood was more derelict.

"Now, it's exponentially better. People care for their properties. I recommend people to move here now."

Kate took up the reporter's pad and pen while living in northern Alberta. The writing bug stuck, and the next 20 years were spent covering everything from local politics to community happenings. She lives in Alberta Avenue with her daughter.

Clearing roads and sidewalks during winter

Why it's important to know roles and responsibilities

TALEA MEDYNSKI

Winter brings cold weather along with snow and ice-covered roads and sidewalks.

With an approximate $60-million annual budget for winter roadway maintenance, the city is responsible for sanding and plowing the streets and takes different approaches to each.

According to the City of Edmonton, sanding is done when needed. However, residents can report icy streets or intersections and request more sand by calling 311 and reporting the location.

Unlike sanding, the city plows by snowfall amount and by road priority. It's only when three centimetres of snow has fallen and more is expected that the city plows main roads. These roads include highways, freeways, arterial roads, and bus collector routes, and they're plowed in that order. The province is responsible for plowing the

Anthony Henday because it's a provincial road.

You may have noticed residential streets are plowed less frequently. That's because main roads must be completed first and because there must be a snowpack of over five centimetres.

Don't, however, expect residential roads to be plowed down to the pavement. According to the city website, plows "[smooth] the snow with blades into a 5 cm (or less) snowpack on which vehicles can drive."

Karey Steil, a community relations advisor with the city's community standards, said the city leaves a snowpack because it would be too expensive to plow everything and because of windrows.

"The windrows would be too big," Steil said. "The bigger the windrow, the narrower the street."

Drivers should also watch for seasonal parking bans from November until March. These bans, given with eight hour's notice, allow the city to clear roads for emergency vehicles, buses, and motorists.

"The signage is on all those roads," said Steil. "People can also sign up for email notifications."

While the city takes care of roads, it's up to homeowners or tenants to shovel sidewalks and driveways within 48 hours of the last snowfall. Residents can report unshoveled sidewalks if there's a lot of snow, if there's compact snow, or if it's slippery. But Steil said, "You have to have a 48 hour window of no snow" before issuing a complaint.

Homeowners could be fined $100 if they don't shovel within that time period. Bylaw officers will usually issue a warning first, but, "It depends. It's up to the discretion of the bylaw officer," said Steil, explaining bylaw officers may issue a ticket immediately if it's a problem property. If the sidewalk still isn't cleared after seven days, the city will fine the homeowner and send out a contractor to clear the snow. While bylaw officers fine the homeowner, Steil said owners and tenants should discuss whose responsibility it is to shovel.

Talk to neighbours who aren't clearing snow and see if it's possible to resolve the problem. Call 311 or go to edmonton.ca and file a complaint if the problem can't be resolved. Complaints require your name, address, phone number, and situation details.

Some neighbours are unable to shovel snow, so you can be a Snow Angel and help. Find out more at edmonton.ca/snowangels.

Change to city sandbox program

Residents will not find the green boxes with free sand at their local community centre this winter. If you want access to free sand, you will have to travel to the nearest roadway maintenance yard to fill your bucket. By putting the boxes in front of the yards, the resources to fill them will be minimal and will save the City of Edmonton approximately $300,000 a year.

Find free sand near the entrance of the following maintenance yards:

Central: 10517 95 St
Northeast: 13003 56 St
Northwest: 14320 114 Ave
Southeast: 5409 59 Ave
Southwest: 14710 Ellerslie Road

Coalition seeks to improve inner city safety

Four new subcommittees formed to address concerns

HAMDIISSAWI

A coalition of community groups trying to improve inner city safety at the grassroots level has announced the next step of its plan.

On Oct. 20, the Safety Summit Committee met at Alberta Avenue Community League to report its progress since June's meeting. Among the developments was the introduction of four subcommittees: business, child and youth safety, social issues, and research.

Fatmeh Kalouti, co-chair of the Safety Summit Committee, said the subcommittees were created in response to feedback collected from the last summit when it invited 75 businesses and agencies to share their concerns.

"There's so many different people that sit at the table and represent the cause," Kalouti said. "The more diverse the population, the more it's going to represent the people that we work with and the people that we're trying to help."

The committee is made up of representatives from the City of Edmonton and non-profits like REACH Edmonton, an organization focused on crime prevention, and Wichitowin, an advocacy group for urban aboriginal people.

A problem identified in June is the lack of collaboration between community organizations competing for funding instead of pooling their resources to provide better programs.

As an after-school program coordinator with the Boys & Girls Clubs Big Brothers Big Sisters of Edmonton, Kalouti, along with representatives of REACH, Wichitowin, and the City of Edmonton, shared how their organizations have collaborated.

Kalouti and Jan Fox, executive director of REACH, shared their work on the All In for Youth program. The program is a pilot project which, in partnership with Edmonton Public Schools, encourages high school completion by providing before- and after-school programming for students at five city schools.

The initiative joins therapists, nutritional support workers, counsellors, and coordinators to provide students with support that extends beyond the classroom and into the home.

"We work as a team to make sure that each and every kid at the school gets the services that they need to be able to be successful and to graduate," Kalouti said.

Jordan Robinson, a worker with Wichitowin youth circle, said he hopes to see a research initiative emerge to identify and address problems like racism.

"You could actually have a quantifiable piece of evidence to base our solutions on because racism is a very subjective problem," Robinson said.

And he wasn't alone. The need for research was discussed in June—a need that Kalouti hopes the research subcommittee, joined by University of Alberta researchers, can start working on.

"We've worked alongside them to formulate a survey that will be sent to community members," Kalouti said, and explained they'll be going door to door to talk to community members about safety and resource needs.

The Santaland Diaries is here once again

David Sedaris' play takes a snarky look at the holidays

TALEA MEDYNSKI

If you feel cranky about the holiday spirit, join others who feel the same by attending David Sedaris' play The Santaland Diaries at this year's Yule Ave.

This is the second year people have an opportunity to watch the play for the price of a donation. While The Santaland Diaries isn't recommended for children, coordinator Frank Zotter explained he included the play as an offering for adults. Last year, it was such a success that he had to turn people away, and so he's including the play again this year. Zotter, an actor, will also star in the play, which runs from Dec. 15-23 at Nina Haggerty Centre for the Arts.

The play is about an unemployed actor who takes a job as a Christmas elf in order to pay the bills. But this story isn't your usual warm-hearted view of the holiday season. Instead, The Santaland Diaries explores holiday consumerism with a cynical, satirical, and acerbic style of humour.

"It's such a great, sardonic take on the season," said Zotter. "There's not a heck of a lot of Christmas plays out there. Most are sentimental. This is the alternative. It's not your typical Christmas-themed story."

The Santaland Diaries is told through the eyes of a disgruntled, middle-aged actor known as Crumpet the Elf while he's working at Santaland. During the play, Crumpet explains how Christmas brings out the worst in people, with highlights like deplorable customers, dubious parental behaviour, terrible children, and drunken Santas.

Zotter said he's looking forward to playing the role of Crumpet again. "I loved doing it and can't wait to do it again. It's such a pleasure to perform off-colour moments," he said. "I love to see people squirm in their seats and then laugh at an uncomfortable truth."

Sedaris wrote The Santaland Diaries as an essay based on his experience working as a Christmas elf at Macy's Department Store. Sedaris' essay became popular after he read it over the radio in 1992. Four years later, Joe Mantello adapted the essay into a one-person, one-act play.

"Sedaris has got a real biting sense of humour. The reveals and satire of what he discovers is smart. He knows how to get under the skin of things and reveal the ugly truth," said Zotter.

The setting of the Nina Haggerty Centre for the Arts adds to the play's appeal. Wayne Paquette is directing and staging the play, and Zotter explained Paquette uses the art as part of the set.

"The whole room is my space. [Wayne] converts the space into Santa's village while keeping the Nina's holiday artwork. It's very festive in that room," Zotter said.

It remains to be seen if the play will become a Yule Ave tradition. Zotter said Edmonton has some die-hard fans of Sedaris' work and those fans came from across the city to see the play last year.

"We'll see how it goes this year," said Zotter. Then he joked, "It could take the place of A Christmas Carol, give it a run for its money."

Making giving a blessing and not a burden

What organizations really need during the holidays

DAVE VON BIEKER

It's 5 p.m. on a Monday in early December. I've got my camera ready, waiting to capture hungry and homeless guests who enter the dining hall at the downtown Hope Mission. I hope to share their smiles as they see the placemat a donor has signed for them. I want pictures of these guests laughing between bites of turkey and gravy so that I can share them on our website. Near the end of the meal, I'll ask some of these guests to speak a thank you message into the camera so our donors know their money has been well spent.

Volunteers lucky or savvy enough to have applied months earlier serve holiday meals with a smile. Come January and February, when winter is cruellest to the homeless, our volunteer coordinator will return to her daily grind, filling a mass of vacant slots at a regular meal.

In my leadership role at Bleeding Heart Art Space, I've felt that tight-chested dread, needing to fill a shift with just a day left. I now work alongside Ruth, the volunteer coordinator for a regular meal program at St. Faith's Anglican Church. Finding volunteers in the lean times is hard. Unlike a boss with paid staff, there is little we can do about last-minute cancellations, except to smile graciously and say "I understand".

I understand that holidays, and Christmas especially, remind us of the importance of family and fellowship. We experience family ourselves, or we miss them acutely this time of year. All of this leads to empathy and the desire to help others. Considering the increased needs of agencies providing extra meals and shelter for cold nights, this aid is a blessing.

I understand that during the season, we are all caught up in 'the spirit of giving'. Or, at least, the spirit of spending. The appeals come often. Year-end is looming, with government tax rebates tied to our financial donations.

There is nothing wrong, to my mind, with a gift that helps the giver as much as the receiver. That good feeling we get serving a meal to a homeless family is good for a reason. This is how we are supposed to feel in life when we help one another, and we are meant to feel this way often.

It is when our generosity comes just once a year, like a snowstorm, and especially with strings attached, that problems arise. For some non-profit staff, the hardest part of Christmas is managing expectations of volunteers who are incredulous that there is no room for them and donors with very specific expectations.

Might I suggest some simple principles to keep in mind as we head into this season of generosity?

If you want to serve a Christmas meal to the hungry or homeless, contact organizations months in advance.

Capitalise on your holiday-themed desire to help by signing up for a volunteer position after the holidays. Your passion now can fuel valuable volunteerism later.

Give what money you can, without strings attached. Give to organizations you trust and then let them do their best work, because the greatest needs may not be what (or when) you expect. Those needs may be anything from toilet paper to floor washers; from data entry to deodorant.

Set up a recurring, monthly gift or a regular shift with your favourite non-profit. Small, regular contributions have a big impact.

Whenever you give, ask the organization "what do you need the most right now?" Non-profits will love you for this question. Just call me up and ask me this and I'll prove it to you.

I've walked the tense tight-rope between the wants of the donor and the needs of the recipient, my camera in hand. I've worked in fundraising and I've coordinated volunteers. I've learned that giving does help, and the greatest gifts are those given selflessly, in times of great need, with no strings attached.

Dave holds a Bachelor of Theology and is artistic director of the Bleeding Heart Art Space. He lives in the inner city with his wife, two children and dog.

Victory and heartbreak mark last day of thoroughbred season

CONSTANCE BRISSENDEN

Horse racing will continue at Northlands until 2018. In November, Northlands and Horse Racing Alberta (HRA) reached an agreement to continue racing at the park until July 2018, when Century Mile, the new track outside the city, is ready.

Mat Monaco, executive director of The Horsemen's Benevolent and Protective Association of Alberta (HBPA), said it's a positive commitment.

"We have more clarity now on Northlands with the announcement on Nov. 3 that we will have a 2017 season there," Monaco said.

But on Oct. 22, when the future of Northlands Park race-track was still undecided, the last day of the 2016 thoroughbred racing season took on a special significance for fans.

As the horses prepared for the first of 11 races, realtor Maureen Nicolson expressed strong hopes for the future. "If the track does move to a site near the Edmonton International Airport, let's make it a spectacular place with vastly improved facilities," Nicolson said. "The racing industry deserves new barns and modern amenities."

In many ways, Oct. 22 was a typical day, with good crowds, a full racing card, and the occasional light skiff of snow.

Jockeys raced after $50,000 purses, one for each of the following races: the 15th running of the Freedom of the City, the 43rd running of the Duchess of York, the 20th running of the Canadian Juvenile, and the eighth running of the Harvest Gold Plate.

Jockey Renaldo Cumberbatch rode two-time winner Can't Use Nellie to victory in the Duchess of York. Can't Use Nellie was shipped in from Winnipeg to win the handicap stakes for fillies and mares.

Tragedy struck during the Canadian Juvenile. Norm's Big Bucks, a loveable two-year-old ridden by jockey Rico W. Walcott, was making a strong move to the lead. Suddenly, it was obvious Norm's Big Bucks was hurt. The way was open for Trooper John and jockey Keishan Balgobin to capture a stunning eight-and-a-half-length first-place win.

Norm's Big Bucks' right front knee was fractured. Riversedge Racing Stables Ltd. bought him in 2015 at the Alberta Yearling Sale for $95,000, a record price for an Alberta-bred horse, and the thoroughbred had already proven his worth in three high-stakes races.

"Norm's Big Bucks was making another of his winning moves and he took a bad step. I didn't even go to the winner's circle with my other horse, Trooper John. I had to focus on what was best for Norm's Big Bucks," said distraught trainer Tim Rycroft. "Everybody loved that colt." Norm's Big Bucks was euthanized that night to prevent him from suffering further.

Racing is a sport noteworthy for victories as well as the rare tragedy. That day was marked by both.

Although the thoroughbred season is finished for 2016, harness racing runs Nov. 18 to Dec. 26. Friday and Saturday night races begin at 6:30 p.m. There is no racing on Dec. 24, but fans can take in a special 1 p.m. program on Dec. 26, the final day of racing in 2016.

Constance's writing and editing career spans more than 40 years. She lives in Parkdale-Cromdale.

Cooking healthy meals on a limited budget

Rising food costs have exposed a need for education

SIERRA BILTON

After Edmonton Food Bank's shocking realization that some clients didn't know how to use the staple ingredients in their food hampers, the organization teamed up with Shaw TV Edmonton.

The result was Cook it Simple, a show hosted by chef Stanley Townsend, who was chair of NAIT's culinary arts program for 25 years. The show's purpose is to inspire Edmontonians to cook delicious and healthy food on a limited budget.

The plan was originally to film one episode, but that soon expanded to six episodes. Better yet, viewers can find full episodes on YouTube and recipes at edmontonsfoodbank.com. Find the recipes by going to the blog and searching under April 7, 2016 and Sept. 29, 2016.

"What actually sparked it was we had a client hold up a potato and say,

'What do I do with this?'" said Mark Doram, director of operations at the Edmonton

Food Bank.

This realization motivated the organization to help educate clients and the public on the endless meal options using basic ingredients found in a typical hamper.

The organization began their search at NAIT in the culinary arts program and found Townsend, who seemed a perfect candidate with his warm and jovial demeanour, not to mention over 45 years of experience.

Growing up in Dawson Creek with his four brothers, Townsend joked he quickly gravitated to the kitchen to ensure he was ahead of the line. He explained he's always understood the necessity of feeding many on a small budget, citing porridge, turnip and moose meat as staples he grew up on.

"In our hampers they'll get a lot of fresh produce," Doram said. "For example, depending on what's in season, they may get a leek," a potentially new ingredient for some.

Townsend explained, "the message is that everybody can do this, that's what I try to deliver in Cook it Simple. These recipes, they're colourful and accessible, so anyone can cook them."

Food security has become an issue felt by many with the rising cost of groceries. Cooking a healthy and tasty dinner can also appear to be a large task that requires excessive amounts of time after work. Townsend and the Edmonton Food Bank have tackled this claim by featuring three straightforward recipes using simple ingredients per 30 minute show.

David Berger, who was involved in the project from the beginning, said the decision hinged on building self-reliance and skills beyond dependence on pre-made and fast food. Berger explained limited incomes challenge many people to pragmatically stretch meals and maintain healthy eating on their incomes.

Ultimately, Townsend said, buying fast food ends up being more expensive because of the lower quality of ingredients. Sarah Halton, public health dietician noted convenience foods often use ingredients such as simple starches (potatoes and noodles) that don't make you feel full the same way whole grains do.

Pre-made foods also cut costs by using fewer expensive ingredients like meat, which also make you feel full. These ingredients lead to needing more food to feel full. She agrees with Townsend that buying raw ingredients and cooking at home will save you money and lead to healthier, more filling meals. Halton added, "the number one way to save money is buy only what you need and actually use it."

Townsend added, "Love food and love yourself; sit down, celebrate and share."

Sierra is a communications student specializing in journalism at MacEwan University. She has a particular love of the art and culture found nestled in Edmonton's Alberta Avenue communities and beyond.

Chef Stanley Townsend has been a teacher and mentor to many students over the years noting, "It's not the mountain I've climbed. It's the people I've helped climb the mountain." | Sierra Bilton

Learning to cook food across cultures

Global Cooking is a social and learning opportunity

REBECCA LIPPIATT

The Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers (EMCN) has discovered food is the ultimate ice breaker.

The organization, which helps new immigrants integrate and settle in Canada, offers a Global Cooking Class on Mondays at Alberta Avenue Community League.

Each week, a group member teaches other participants recipes from their homeland. While the goal is to learn to cook, the class has many benefits. The leader practices his or her leadership, teaching, and language skills. It is also a social occasion, crossing cultural and gender barriers, and the group shares stories and translates for each other. Spontaneous song, dancing and laughter help participants feel welcomed and included.

For more information about the program or other programs offered by EMCN, contact Steffanie Beekman at sbeekman@emcna.ab.ca or 780.423.9692.

Rebecca has been a full-time photographer for the last 9 years and is a mother to two boys and stepmother to two girls.

Daro is homesick for his family, who are Syrian refugees in Lebanon, and is anticipating a taste of his homeland. Basel is dressed as Thor for Halloween, celebrated in Syria as St. Barbara's Day. Ahmed Abdulkadir breaks down barriers

Community advocate strives to create strong communities

ADAM MILLIE

Big ideas for change has taken root on Norwood Boulevard.

Ahmed Abdulkadir, executive director of the Ogaden Somali Community of Alberta (OSCAR), operates a community centre on 111 Avenue. He's also one of the partners of the Safety Summit, an alliance of aboriginal, Somali, and community groups who have partnered with Edmonton Police Services and the City of Edmonton.

"[We are] working with mainstream organizations and working with community leagues to break down barriers between neighbours," said Abdulkadir.

He has brought diverse groups of people together to find common solutions to community problems. So far he has contacted 80 organizations and has the goal of contacting 20 more by the end of the year.

For the past year-and-a-half, he and his organization of 350 members have worked out of a former payday loan office on Norwood Boulevard.

"We celebrate black culture, we talk about the contributions of black Canadians since the inception of Canada, and we talk about how Canada was the first country to free the slaves," said Abdulkadir. "There were bad things that happened in the past, but we move forward collectively."

When he's not at his office, he's shuttling his three kids to school, coaching soccer, and leading youth basketball programs. He sits on several committees and is involved with Black History Month and Black Lives Matter.

By bringing groups together, he has been able to take on bigger projects than many community organizations can manage.

"We're already working on so many issues that are affecting the community, whether it's the safety of downtown communities, or it's economic development on the north side," he said. "We had our Cross Cultural Leaders Summit on Community Economic Development where we brought together regional communities and cultural communities to work on the elimination of racism and the creation of jobs."

The summit was well attended, with municipal and provincial governments at the table along with agencies and community leaders. Business success stories were told to the forum, and solutions were presented for implementing diverse and inclusive board appointments.

But the work isn't done, and his next project will involve working with the school board to ensure schools are safe, inclusive, and provide quality education for all students. Abdulkadir said he intends to ensure the board addresses what he calls "the failure of government to change attitudes and mindsets of the community."

Part of changing perceptions is working with youth so they don't learn prejudice, to build stronger communities by shaping the adults of tomorrow.

"That is my project for 2017 in the schools: change the attitudes of the youth early, and then we can bring justice to all communities."

He said he wants to improve the lives of children and ensure we all contribute to making public spaces safe for everyone.

"When I see the needles and the drugs are everywhere in community parks, and no one is picking it up? If it's not safe for a Somali kid, it's not safe for a white kid or an aboriginal kid either. It's our park for God's sake and we should work together to clean it up."

With the work he's already done, it's fair to say we can expect more from Abdulkadir in the future. Our entire community has been improved by his presence on Norwood Boulevard. He is a positive agent of change.

Adam works as a mechanic and lives in Alberta Avenue.

Understanding the meaning and origin of Yule

Celebrating the season by looking into familiar symbols

AMANDA SOKAL

Yule or the winter solstice is the shortest day of the year and Pagans celebrate it around the same time as Christmas. In fact, Yule is the precursor to Christmas. When Christianity was being spread throughout Europe, many of the same symbols and traditions were assimilated into Christianity as a means to ease the recently converted Pagans into the faith.

So if we share similar traditions and symbols, what do they mean? Where did these familiar holiday decorations come from? I started thinking about this, as the Yule season is upon us and it is time to start planning the holiday and the ritual. We celebrate the holiday in many of the same ways as Christmas is celebrated. We give gifts, prepare a special meal and get together with loved ones.

An important part of the celebration is the ritual, which is where and how Pagans do spiritual work and our magic. Each ritual has a specific purpose and Yule is no exception. Ravenna (a Wiccan) wrote the ritual I chose this year and I found it on her website (angelfire.com/wa3/angelline/yule_solitary_ritual.htm). The ritual acknowledges the darkness of winter, the dying of the Sun and his rebirth as the days get longer. It gives thanks to the Mother for our continued survival, protection and prosperity. The days are cold and dark, but we still have much to celebrate. We have enough food to sustain us. We have friends and loved ones to warm our homes and hearts. We know each day brings warmth, sunlight and growth back to us again. We have survived.

As I chose and prepared for the ritual, I pondered the meanings of these familiar symbols. Part of the joy of Yule is decorating in preparation of the ritual and the season's festivities. Chances are most of us have fond memories of decorating a tree, lighting candles, and hanging mistletoe.

According to the Sacred Earth Journeys blog, these decorations have a Pagan origin. Pagans also decorated evergreen trees, but not because they liked the piney scent in their home. Evergreens were special because their colour never faded, and Pagans brought them indoors to symbolically protect life from the cold of winter. As for the tradition of kissing a sweetheart under the mistletoe? Pagans hung mistletoe to promote fertility in the coming year. Candles were more than just sources of light. They represent the light of the Sun and Pagans lit them to celebrate his return as the days grow longer. And a wreath on the door represents the circle of life, and the knowledge that winter will end.

No matter how you choose to celebrate or what you choose to call the holiday, the meanings are universal: peace, light, love, and health to everyone. May those same blessings come to all of you.

Amanda is a budding entrepreneur, a practicing Wiccan, a burgeoning gardener and an herbalist who is working to obtain a degree as a naturopathic practitioner.
